Description: This is a course that aims to familiarize the student with the theoretical foundations of business ethics scholarship. In particular, the course will focus on readings in moral philosophy and moral psychology that underpin the business ethics literature. The course seeks to familiarize the student with both foundational texts and emerging scholars and scholarship. We will proceed on the basis of substantive topics. Topics are selected in part with consideration for “business relevance” and in part for general relevance to the field from an academic perspective with the development of future scholarship and teaching in mind. For each topic we will read one or more theory pieces as well as a combination of canonical and newer applied pieces. The provisional topics and readings are listed below. (I expect some of this to change in light of your interests and my hope that we can get one or more scholars in to share their work with us.)

Formal requirements: Students’ major assignment will be to produce a paper of publishable quality by the end of the semester. That paper should be 18-22 pages in length – double-spaced, including single-spaced footnotes. (A single-spaced bibliography may also be appended, if sources are not fully cited in notes. It would count in terms of the page limits.) The paper topic must be discussed with the professor and approved in advance. A short, written proposal for the paper should be submitted as part of this process (but will not be graded). The written proposal is due March 10, 2019, at 8 PM. I will schedule meetings with each of you for the week of March 11 to discuss your proposals. Each student will workshop a draft version of their paper in one of our last two class sessions, and the other seminar participants will offer constructive feedback. The final deadline for the paper is May 6, 2019.

In addition, students will be expected to participate actively in seminar discussions. To that end, students will be asked to present the material for the week several times over the course of the semester. Short reflection papers may be assigned. The quality and regularity of class participation, including presentation of the material, and response papers (if any) may be taken into account to increase or decrease a student’s final grade by one-half step (e.g., B+ to A- or vice versa).
